Freedom to use. Freedom to read. Freedom to know. Freedom to share.

The Attribution license that applies reads as follows: <blockquote cite="Attribution. You must attribute the work in the manner specified by the author or licensor (but not in any way that suggests that they endorse you or your use of the work).

* For any reuse or distribution, you must make clear to others the license terms of this work. The best way to do this is with a link to this web page.

* Any of the above conditions can be waived if you get permission from the copyright holder.“>My emphasis. If the group description spells out that the authors automatically grant permission to waive the attribution requirement, that should work, yes?

I guess it would still be better to get the “100% restriction-free” status.

[...] The group description suggests that you can use them in your displays, presentations, publications or anywhere else. I immediately found some I would like to use in this blog. You are also encouraged to join the group photo pool and add your own freely shareable photos. [via Library Crunch] [...]
